Best Places set high standards despite hard times

By Autumn C. Giusti
Associate Editor

In these tough economic times, it's become ever more challenging for companies to take care of their employees, not to mention their budgets.

But even as bottom lines dwindle, this year's 50 Best Places to Work have managed to keep their staffs happy, motivated and well compensated.

For the 2008 installment, CityBusiness partnered with the Human Resources Management Association's New Orleans chapter to revamp the Best Places selection process and choose the top companies for our sixth annual event.

HRMA brought a wealth of great ideas and some genuine credibility to the table. To maintain objectivity, HRMA members whose companies submitted nominations recused themselves from the selection process.

With HRMA's guidance, we devised a scoring system based on benefits including average salary, health care, paid time off and employee programs, coupled with a brief employee telephone survey.

But we also looked for intangibles such as testimonials, morale programs and fun office activities. (For instance, did you know Wolfe Law Group keeps a French bulldog as an office pet?)

Our results yielded the 2008 Best Places class of 35 large and 15 small companies.

Based on the U.S. Small Business Administration's definition, large businesses have 50 or more employees. Companies that are part of larger corporations but with fewer than 50 New Orleans employees were categorized at the judges' discretion.

Using CityBusiness' findings as a guide, HRMA member Dorothy Carter, senior consultant with Harper Resources, compiled an impressive statistical snapshot on the honorees. Overall, all 50 companies' benefits offerings are at or above the national trends spelled out in the Society for Human Resource Management's 2008 Benefits Survey.

Of the winners:

- 94 percent offer some type of monetary incentive in their compensation package. The national rate is much lower at 58 percent.

- 94 percent support employees' community involvement activities, more than five times the national rate of 18 percent.

- 90 percent offer health care with 80 percent coverage or higher.

- 90 percent offer 401(k) plans, compared with 84 percent nationally.

- 38 percent offer child-care benefits, whether through on-site day-care or other support.

For a detailed look at each company's salary and benefits, turn to page 66.

Leading this year's large companies are: 1. Harrah's New Orleans Casino and Hotel, 2. North Oaks Health System and 3. West Jefferson Medical Center. The top ranked small companies are 1. PMOLink, 2. Wolfe Law Group and 3. Chopin, Wagar, Richard & Kutcher.

Eleven newcomers joined this year's honorees: Wolfe Law, North Oaks, Creative Engineering Group, Rimkus Consulting Group, Schafer Group, Eagan Insurance Agency, Gregory C. Rigamer & Associates, Omni Royal Orleans Hotel, Pool Corp., Slidell Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, and Tulane University.

And in terms of staying power, Ralph Brennan Restaurant Group, West Jefferson Medical Center and Zehnder Communications have remained on the list since its inception in 2003.

Congratulations to the 2008 Best Places to Work. Their perseverance during hard times makes a strong statement to the business community as well as their employees. •

Cox New Orleans thanks
our employees and staff for making
Cox a great place to work.

Jones Walker

Starting a new job is often stressful. Meeting new people, adjusting to new work routines and responsibilities, and getting used to a new boss is enough to stress out anyone.

When Andrew Bruns, Jones Walker's chief financial officer, started at the law firm in 1994, that was all compounded by a nightmarish revelation: His then 4-year-old son Kevin was diagnosed with a brain tumor.

Once the diagnosis became known, Rick McMillan, who at the time was the chairman of the executive committee at Jones Walker, walked into Bruns' office and talked to him, discussing what it meant to be a parent, and telling Bruns to take off however much time he needed.

"They don't know anything about me, but he (McMillan) gives me carte blanche," Bruns said. "You get a lot of loyalty after that."

Bruns does not believe this kind of behavior was an aberration at Jones Walker.

"They have always taken the high road in anything we do," he said. "It's an issue of what's the right thing to do. That's been the prevailing firm philosophy for as long as I've been here."

Ann Sens, a legal secretary at Jones Walker for 31 years, said people are treated well day in and day out.

"I work for two attorneys. They make me feel like I'm working with them, not for them," said Sens.

In addition to this, there is a luncheon for the staff at which the attorneys and management dress as waiters and serve the staff.

Even though the legal profession is often stereotyped as cutthroat, that is not the experience Asher Friend, an associate at Jones Walker, has had.

"It's a very non-competitive atmosphere," Friend said.

The firm also takes great care in recognizing its new employees, as well as its veterans, employees said.

Friend said that when he started in 2003, attor-

Sens said employees who have been with the firm for 25 years receive 25 roses, a gold pin and a cake. After 30 years, the company takes employees in a limousine to Commander's Palace for a celebratory lunch.

"I've seen people leave over the years and come back," Sens said. "They always say, 'It's the people.'"
